To All New England Law | Boston Students:

As in past semesters, New England Law received funds from a grant which may be used to support students and higher education institutions with expenses and financial needs related to the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic. Although we are now in the endemic stage, we realize that students may continue to encounter acute financial challenges. According to federal guidelines, the need for funds has to be connected to COVID. This semester, we are again offering a limited amount of emergency financial grants to students.

If you have continued to experience financial hardship directly related to the COVID-19 health emergency, you may apply for emergency relief funds. For your convenience, the application is attached and can also be found here. All applications will be carefully evaluated for continued financial need, the nature and extent of the acute financial hardship and its relationship to COVID, and federal financial aid eligibility criteria. As the pool of funds is limited, the amount available to any individual student will depend on the need. We are aiming to allocate funds to as many affected students as possible.

In order to review applications and make distributions in a timely manner, we ask that you submit your application to emergencyfund@nesl.edu no later than May 5, 2023, our priority deadline.
